ROYAL AUSTRALIAN AIR FORCE BASE TINDAL, Australia — Exercise Aces North 2008 ended Dec. 2 after nearly a month of aerial combat training scenarios practiced over the skies here.

Eleven F/A-18 Hornet jets from Marine All-Weather Fighter Attack Squadron 121 participated in the exercise along with 305 Marine aircrew and supporting personnel from various installations across Marine Forces Pacific.

“The purpose of the exercise was to train the next wave of Australian Fighter Combat Instructors,” said Lt. Col. Joseph E. Maybach, operations officer for VMFA(AW)-121. “Aces North is the culmination of their six-month training course and equivalent to our TOPGUN or SFTI (United States Navy Strike Fighter Tactics Instructor program).”

Similar to TOPGUN, Aces North is designed to produce highly qualified jet-flying instructors that will return to their home units and squadrons as their newest tactical experts.

The exercise exposes the pilots to a myriad of

A cold and snowy morning didn't stop Marines and some volunteers from waiting outside the Crossroads Mall and Commissary here Dec. 6, encouraging donations for Corps' forward deployed.

Operation Comfort & Care Packages may seem similar to Toys for Tots, but this campaign stuffs the stockings of those participating in Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom.

The event, hosted by Marine Corps Family Team Building, gathers boxes of the most-requested items by those fulfilling individual augmentee billets on the station and ships them in to theater.

Among some of the items requested were portable compact-disc players and CDs, newspapers, magazines, all sizes of batteries and some hygienic items.

All of these creature comforts can go a long way, according to Lance Cpl. Victor g.

Choirs singing, babies bundled in blankets, apple cider served with holiday cheer, it was all of a winter evening's atmosphere at the Cherry Blossom Triangle here Dec. 5 as the station hosted a tree lighting ceremony, commemorating the start of the holiday season.

Standing before a crowd of more than 450 locals with his wife and son, Col. Michael O'Halloran, station commanding officer, directed the plugging-in of the station's Christmas tree, which consisted of more than a couple thousand bulbs, according to Marine Corps Community Services personnel.

The event, which has been held at the Cherry Blossom Triangle here for 10 years, draws a larger crowd every year. The Matthew C. Perry High School Jazz Band and the 2nd grade choir performed traditional Christmas music for the audience. Filipino pop-rock band, Live 8, also performed during the event. O'Halloran welcomed service members and guests to join in the holiday festivities.

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

'If only in my dreams'

CHAPLAIN A.R. KUSS
COMMAND CHAPLAIN

While I was growing up, one of the favorite recordings of my parents was "White Christmas" written by Irving Berlin and performed by Bing Crosby in 1942. It was not until my first year of theological graduate studies in Italy that reality and weight of the lyrics made an impact. This song prompted emotions that I remember well to this day — the dreaded emotions and memories that we call homesickness.

I have had homesickness many times over the years, to include most national and religious holidays, since I have entered military service. Intellectually I know I have survived and will again survive the pangs of missing loved ones and that I will have the creature comforts necessary to continue my mission. Homesickness still comes to visit me and those around.

Years of experience have taught me some things about this phenomenon we call homesickness. It can attack suddenly or slowly at almost any given time. It reaches the physically strong, the intellectually gifted, the mature adult and does not discriminate its visit to the rest of us. A visit to medical will only have the staff give a nod of understanding and kind words. There is no medication for it.

Homesickness is the emotional and sometimes physical pain that comes with not being with family and friends we love. It is the pain we experience when we remember all the things and activities we have done and would like to experience again with our loved ones. This pain can cause us to weep, mess up our eating habits, disrupt our sleep and dreams and can even cause us to be sad for some time. Sometimes we may even feel like we are "losing it." Experience has taught me how to befriend homesickness.

Homesickness is based in love. We miss those whom we love when we are not around them. We enjoy familiar sights, sounds and routines. We want to continue to spend time with those we love and make more memories because we love and are loved by them. This is normal, healthy and what life is all about: loving and being loved. Fortunately, life is also about change and growing to encompass new people and experiences. This is where the pain enters in. We must embrace both the past and the present.

Experience has taught me to accept homesickness as a reminder of how deeply I love my family and friends. It has taught me that I am wealthy beyond words because of what they mean to me and how they are part of my life. To deal with the pain, I return to that which will ease the pain. I phone family and friends. I look at pictures to prompt happy memories. Finally, I reach out to the people around me. I invite and accept invitations to movies, go on trips, go to out to eat, or gather people to play games. I allow my emotions to be emotions but not to define who I am or what I do with my life.

Letters to the editor...

Mother and son pay Marines heartfelt 'Thank You'

Nakamoto and her son

Hello.

I'm a mother with severely disabled son. My son had to undergo surgery and needed to be hospitalized. I took my son to the Hiroshima-Nishi Medical Center at 10 a.m., Dec. 4. After I parked my car, I was pushing my son in a wheelchair and heavily-laden carriage alone. Then a young black man came up to me and he helped me push the carriage. I guess maybe he is a United States service member because a white man he was with was wearing a sweatshirt with a USMC logo on it. The person who helped me to push the carriage full of stuff for the hospitalization seemed not to understand Japanese at all.

I said, "Arigato-gozaïmasu ('Thank you' in Japanese)."

But he looked confused. I should have said, "Thank you," to him, but I was thoughtless. I am so sorry this happened.

I always regret to hear about crimes committed by military and bad rumors about military.

We didn't have any conversation, but I fully felt and recognized his gentleness. It was a very heart-warming happening for me.

I was really pleased to see very kind military personnel.

Please tell him "Thank you so much for your help and kindness."

Best regards,
Tamayo Nakamoto

Corps Question

Q. If I live in family housing, what are some considerations I should take when putting up holiday decorations?

A. Holiday decorations are encouraged, but there are a few rules to remember. Don't put decorations on rooftops or use tape, nails, screws or other hardware to hang your decorations. For the remainder of December through Jan. 2, holiday lights are allowed. Lights must be turned off by midnight on Fridays and Saturdays. For every other day of the week, lights must be turned off at 11 p.m.

combat scenarios involving both air-to-air and air-to-ground maneuvers.

"Aces North puts everything together for them in one exercise and forces them to integrate dissimilar elements (KC-130s, F-111 Strike Aircraft, and F-18 fighter jets) in large-scale force employment," said Maj. William B. Millett, VMFA(AW)-121 training officer. "The FCI (Fighter Combat Instructor) students take turns acting as the mission commander by devising a plan, briefing the other pilots and executing the mission safely and lethally."

The purpose for having American support in an Australian exercise was to mimic a large-scale, coalition-style air operation.

This gave FCI students exposure to working with an ally, in this case the United States Marine Corps, and the opportunity to work with them as a team to accomplish their objectives.

"Throughout the exercise we accomplished several large-force employments with up to 30 to 40 aircraft airborne," said Millett. "Just having this ability to work with other squadrons in a large scale improves our capability to work with each other as allies."

Although the exercise was intended to produce top-notch Australian Fighter Combat Instructors, the Marine pilots benefited greatly from the exercise as well.

"It worked out for both of us," said Millett. "Our abilities and our means of executing a mission complimented each other very well, which is helpful to know when you're dealing with another ally.

All the pilots, including Marine pilots got increased proficiency from flying in the large-force employment events."

Exercise Aces North 2008 was successful in accomplishing all of its objectives and produced the next wave of RAAF Fighter Combat Instructors.

After having participated in Aces North, VMFA(AW)-121 will head out to Kadana Air Base and then to Korea to fulfill another exercise.

The squadron is temporarily based at Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni as part of the Unit Deployment Program.

ROYAL AUSTRALIAN AIR FORCE BASE TINDAL, Australia — The increased number of visiting service members and aircraft for Exercise Aces North 2008 here has prompted the RAAF base to increase its number of security personnel.

Select Marines from Marine Wing Support Squadron 171 are serving alongside RAAF military police during the bilateral training exercise.

"Our No. 1 role here is to protect our aircraft," said Cpl. Tim J. Ring, RAAF military working dog handler and security patroller. "Any time an exercise takes place here, we require personnel from the visiting nation to assist us in security operations and to serve as liaisons between their military and ours."

Along with serving as an extra set of eyes and ears during patrols, the security

Marines have participated in training exercises dealing with RAAF military working dogs and their handlers. Since the Marines are still relatively new to the area, the working dogs are unfamiliar with them, making the Marines the perfect test subjects for a training exercise called man trailing.

During the exercise, the dogs can pick up the scent of a human and track him down without needing an article or sample of his scent with which to start.

The dog will simply recognize a human scent along a path or trail, and follow that scent until the animal reaches its source.

The RAAF security police use the Marine security personnel to act as infiltrators to the base or other key locations within the installation. The patrolling dogs and their handlers are tested in their ability to locate and assess the nature of the suspicious person and the threat they pose to the base.

Tarawa: 65 years later

STAFF SGT. BRIAN GRIFFIN
MARINE CORPS BASES JAPAN

TARAWA ATOLL (December 5, 2008) — More than six decades have passed since Roy Robinson first set foot on the sandy beaches of Betio, in the Republic of Kiribati, part of the Tarawa Atoll. Today Betio bears little resemblance to what it used to be, or what it was to Robinson 65 years ago. Just past his 18th birthday, Pfc. Robinson, a rifleman assigned to 2nd Battalion, 2nd Marine Regiment, 2nd Marine Division, was on one of many Higgins Boats that landed on Red Beach Two in 1943.

All Robinson remembers about Betio's landscape are the Japanese fortifications that once lined the coast.

"I can't believe this is Tarawa," Robinson said with a grin. "We've got to be on the wrong island. Because the only thing here last time was sand, trees and pill boxes."

Robinson's memory, along with his hearing, has faded a bit over the last 65 years, but the former Marine's thoughts drifted back to a place described by him in three simple words.

"It was Hell!" he said. "All we could think about was what the hell are we doing here and how do we get off this place."

Thinking back, Robinson said there were a few things he knows helped him through the battle.

"Brotherhood and camaraderie helped to get us through it," Robinson said. "We had to pay attention to our left, right, and front, but I knew they had my back," Robinson said, referring to the Marines charging forward from the rear.

Robinson was one of 35,000 Marines, sailors and soldiers who stormed the shores of Betio Nov. 20, 1943.

Exactly 65 years later, the Marines once again landed on Betio.

More than 30 Marines and sailors from the III Marine Expeditionary Force

Roy Robinson speaks with Lieutenant General Richard C. Zilmer about what he experienced 65 years earlier when he landed on Red Beach Two in a Higgins landing craft. Zilmer, the commanding general of the III Marine Expeditionary Force and commander of Marine Corps Bases Japan, travelled to Betio Island, in the Republic of Tarawa, to attend the ceremony commemorating the 65th anniversary of the battle Nov. 20. Photo by Staff Sgt. Brian Griffin travelled to Betio, to pay tribute to the service members who battled there many years ago.

A ceremony commemorating the 65th anniversary of the Battle of Tarawa was held Nov. 20 at a small memorial standing in a nondescript field near the shores of Betio.

Nearly 1,000 local villagers, mainly children, flocked to see what all the pomp and circumstance was about as more than 100 distinguished visitors attended the ceremony.

Republic of Tarawa President Anote Tong, Adm. Timothy Keating, commander, U.S. Pacific Command, and Lt. Gen. Richard C. Zilmer, commanding general for III MEF and Marine Corps Bases Japan, were among the guests in attendance.

"What began on that morning only 65 years ago and lasting for a terrifying 76 hours is what brings us here today," said Zilmer. "Today we meet here to commemorate the lives, the sacrifices, and the losses of those gallant young men who braved the horrors and savagery of modern day combat to overcome an enemy equally committed to victory."

Near the end of the ceremony, wreaths were placed at the memorial and Tong concluded by thanking the veterans who fought for his people.

"I salute those courageous young men who served during that time," he said. "We are indeed honored to be a part of this commemoration to honor the memories of those brave men and to pay our respect to their courage and personal sacrifice for the people of Kiribati and humanity."

After the ceremony, Robinson departed to walk along the same sandy shores of Betio he landed on 65 years before. But it was different now.

The crackle of machine gun fire was replaced with the sound of waves breaking along the shore line.

There were no more working weapons of war there, and nature had reclaimed the land once dominated by pillboxes.

An 8-inch coastal defense gun mount sits on the point at Green Beach, rising above the sand with its muzzle pointed inland. Shrubs have overtaken the concrete and steel, and hundreds of red crabs race throughout the battlefield debris. Other than some graffiti and weathering over the last 65 years, the area remains as it was following the Battle of Tarawa. Photo by Staff Sgt. Brian Griffin Iwakuni's Annual Toys for Tots Program officially launched Sunday during the 11th annual "Thunder Run," motorcycle rally and toy collection event.

About 170 motorcycles lined the station's streets to participate in the ride around the perimeter of the station in celebration of the Toys for Tots Program.

The campaign gathers popularity with each year thanks to motorcycle rally. The Single Marine Program counted 117 Japanese bikes coming from off base. SMP coordinator, Jay Stovall said part of the event's growth could be attributed good weather and rider's culture.

"You'd have to be a biker to truly understand, but when you're out there and you're part of the group it's pretty impressive," he said. "For four years now, we've had immensely cooperative weather. Sometimes it seems like whenever we saddle up for the ride, the skies will part and the sun will shine just for us."

The grassroots support of the base motorcycle club may make up for the bulk of the turnout, but as one non-riding Japanese participant said during the event, coming to this type of charity event and celebrating with Americans is what keeps most coming back.

According to the Toys for Tots official Web site, "the mission of the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve Toys for Tots program is to collect new, unwrapped toys during October, November and December each year and distribute those toys as Christmas gifts to needy children in the community in which the campaign is conducted."

Riders and participants began donating toys to the campaign during the event. Marines and volunteers will wrap, classify and donate the toys to at least eight local orphanages for the holidays once the collection period has ended.

HADITHA DAM, Iraq — Marines with Regimental Combat Team 5 finished the final demilitarization of the Haditha Dam located along the Euphrates River.

Major Gen. Martin Post, deputy commanding general for Multi-National Force-West, signed over the dam Dec. 3 to Iraqi government officials and thereby capped the turnover of dam operations and security.

Al-Kumanji Mawafek Mohammed, director of real estate, and several other members of the Iraqi government, along with representatives from the Iraqi Police and Iraqi Army, attended on behalf of the Iraqi government to sign the final paperwork.

"I just want to say thank you to all of the Marines who have been here over the years and say how much (Coalition Forces) appreciated the leadership of the gentlemen who have been here the entire time running this facility and coordinating with the Marines and Coalition forces. They have done just a wonderful job during tough times to keep this facility up and running," said Maj. Gen. Post.

Coalition forces have been responsible for the dam since 2003, and during that time the dam housed thousands of military personnel.

"The dam was a piece of key terrain because of its position on the river and also because it provides around one-third of Iraq's electricity," said Master Sgt. Joe Lopez, 36, from Chicago, who is the staff non commissioned officer in charge of the Haditha Dam Mayors Cell, RCT 5. "Our presence here has also acted as a deterrent for people trying to smuggle things down the river."

The turnover of the dam comes as little surprise as Coalition forces continue to assume an over watch role and the Iraqis continue to take control of security throughout the country.

"While the Marines and Coalition forces occupied the dam, we were only able to send workers in for the day shift," said Hassan Yahyah Hassan, who is a representative for the ministry of electricity as well as the overall director of the Dam.

"The removal of Coalition forces will facilitate the technical crew's movement within the dam. We only have around 100 personnel, but now we will be able to fill three shifts that will employ 460 personnel and will keep the dam running 24-hours a day."

Security for the facility, once a responsibility of Coalition forces, is now in the hands of the Iraqi Army and the police. The turnover of responsibility is a huge step for Iraqis and military members alike because it signified the increasing self-sufficiency of Iraq.

"We are leaving, but we are willing and prepared to support the Iraqi Army and other security elements if they need us," said Maj. Gen. Post.
