In 1862, a Union soldier discovered an envelope lying in the grass at a position previously held by Confederate troops.

Inside the envelope were three cigars wrapped in a piece of paper. The paper turned out to be a letter endorsed to Gen. Robert E. Lee, delineating the exact route to be taken by Confederate troops in their march toward Maryland.

When the commander of the Union forces received the letter, he maneuvered his troops accordingly and stopped Lee's advance at the subsequent Battle of Antietam.

Loosing the letter and giving the Union access to vital information became one of the greatest blunders in military history.

Finding top-secret information inside an envelope filled with cigars may sound like a thing of the past.

However, security leaks are as prevalent and dangerous today as they were during the American Civil War.

In the current era of blogging, Facebook and MySpace, everyone can become the culprit of security leaks.

"This is especially true for service members who possess information regarding their base, unit and upcoming deployments," said Andrew R. Samuels, the station's anti-terrorism officer. "Any information service members accidentally or unknowingly post on the Internet can end up in the wrong hands."

Service members here along with staff master labor contractors and General Services Administration personnel came together for the grand opening of Iwakuni's USMC ServMart here Feb. 18.

"The purpose of the USMC ServMart is to provide the mission requirements for official government purchases to the MCAS Iwakuni populace," said Linda R. Richison-Steves, director, Pacific/Far East Retail Operations.

The Marine Corps and the GSA established a partnership to provide an enterprise-wide solution for the management of the Marine Corps Garrison Retail Supply System. The USMC ServMart is the solution for MCAS Iwakuni; customers are encouraged to identify any additional requirements not in the initial inventory.

This partnership was finalized by a memorandum of agreement on Oct. 26, 2007.

"It is a true partnership between GSA and MCAS Iwakuni. The official shoppers will appreciate the streamline billing process as well," said Richison-Steves.

At full operation, the ServMart will carry 1,500 stocked items. The final containers of inventory are scheduled to arrive within the next two weeks.

'Survival of the fittest'

Lt. CMDR. JOHN Q. COMETA
DEPUTY COMMAND

"Survival of the fittest" according to Wikipedia is a phrase which is shorthand for a concept relating to competition for survival or predominance. Herbert Spencer originally used this phrase in his Principles of Biology of 1864. He believes that "only the fittest organisms will prevail."

In a recent poll, 50 percent of Americans are worried and afraid of losing their jobs. Last January, 4.8 million Americans filed for unemployment benefits.

The global economic situation is so serious that some agencies say that it has surpassed terrorism as the top threat to national security.

Many of our people are gripped with a sense of fear. The rate of suicide has soared skyward. In these days of uncertainties, is Herbert Spencer right when he said "only the fittest will survive and prevail?"

Two thousand years ago, Jesus said, "Therefore everyone who hears these words of mine and puts them into practice is like a wise man who built his house on the rock. The rain came down, the streams rose, and the winds blew and beat against that house; yet it did not fall, because it had its foundation on the rock. But everyone who hears these words of mine and does not put them into practice is like a foolish man who built his house on sand. The rain came down, the streams rose, and the winds blew and beat against that house, and it fell with a great crash." (Matthew 7:24-27)

The rain, wind and the flood could be our present economic crisis and trials of life that we all face. To withstand all kinds of crisis, Jesus wants us to have a solid foundation. In other words, the fittest are those who have a solid foundation.

What is this foundation He is talking about? In Christian context, He is referring to Himself, the living Word and the Rock of all ages. But it could be our core values of honor, courage and commitment. Are we nurturing and internalizing our core values?

Suicide is now becoming a serious public health threat to our nation.

One way to combat suicide is to encourage all our Marines and sailors not only to be physically, socially, and mentally fit, but above all to be spiritually fit. To be spiritually fit does not necessarily mean we have to be religious.

As Covey emphasized, the spiritual dimension is our core, our center, our foundation, our commitment to our value system or life's governing principles that guide us to do what is right and what is wrong, which acts to perform and refrain from even in the midst of crisis.

To determine if a Marine or sailor is physically fit, he or she has to pass the physical readiness test. Though we don't have a spiritual readiness test to determine if a Marine or sailor is spiritually fit, we still need to promote spiritual fitness.

I heard of a sailor who could max his PRT but was processed out because he made wrong choices. He is physically fit but spiritually unfit.

As a Christian, my spiritual exercise or discipline includes prayer, reading of God's Word, meditation, fasting, fellowship and witnessing.

As one Christian wrote, "Just like regular exercise builds our muscles and removes excess fat from our bodies making us healthier — spiritual exercise removes the weight of our secret sins (bad habits), our past sins and helps us to resist temptation (make right choices)." Semper Fidelis!

The Camera Guy

IWAKUNI APPROACH PHOTOGRAPHY COLUMNIST

Listen to this story. Joe Shutterbug picks up a camera at his local electronics department. He presses the zoom button, watches the camera expand in size while an image of his girlfriend's nostrils is blown to magnificent proportions on the camera's shiny liquid-crystal display. Joe belts out in laughter and says, "Ooooooo! I want to buy this one!" The same night, Joe is sitting next to his girlfriend at a party and watches her begin to fall out of her chair. As Joe reaches for his camera and tries to zoom out enough to capture the scene, he realizes the lens can't fit his girlfriend's entire debacle into the shot. Before Joe can get out of his chair, the moment is already lost! Joe didn't realize it at the electronics department, but his new camera has no wide-angle capabilities. We can all learn from Joe's mistake.

Nearly every camera lens has a funny mess of numbers printed somewhere near the glass. On point-and-shoot cameras, a lot of these numbers say something like 6.5-25mm or 10x zoom. On professional lenses that can be used on high-end cameras, these numbers may say 50mm or 18-200mm — some of them even 800mm or 1000mm! But what do all these numbers mean and which numbers are the best for every-

These numbers are measurements of the distance between the optical center of the lens and the focal point (i.e., the camera's digital sensor or the surface of the 35mm film), otherwise known as focal length. Basically, these numbers will indicate how much of the scene the camera will be able to see, using a very precise measurement.

Photographers can use these numbers to determine which lens is necessary for accomplishing a specific task. Although most consumers can see just how powerful their camera's lens is by pressing the zoom button, they may like to know whether or not their lens is good for more than just a few shooting situations.

As a lens' focal length gets shorter, the lens' angle-of-view increases. A lens with a fixed focal length (a lens that does not zoom) never changes its angle-of-view. Likewise, when the focal length is a larger measurement, the angle is very narrow.

To demonstrate this effect, make a circle with your thumb and index finger. If you look through the circle at an arm's-length away, you only see a very small portion of your immediate surroundings. If you bring the circle right up to your eye and look through, you can see more of the scene. Now stop it. You look silly and you're embarrassing me. By the way, if you show your friends this example and they look through the hole, you get to punch them once for free.

Now that you know a little about the effects of focal length, you can shop a little smarter next time at the electronics department.

Photographers who want to capture landscapes and indoor scenes might try using a wide-angle lens with a very short focal length.

When making portraits, taking pictures of small insects or something off in the distance, a lens with an extensive focal length or telephoto capabilities might be necessary. When shopping for the most useful point-and-shoot camera, it might be best to shop for one that has the most range from wide-angle to telephoto. The best way to capture moments that happen right next to you is with a wide-angle lens. This style of lens produces images that somewhat emulate the angle-of-view humans can see with their own eyes.

Marines from Marine Wing Support Squadron 171 Explosive Ordnance Disposal bow their heads for a prayer during Staff Sgt. Daniel L. Hansen's memorial service. More than 450 people attended the afternoon service. Hansen was a native of Tracy, Calif.

Station pays tribute to local fallen Marine

He was a son, a brother, a friend and a Marine.

Staff Sgt. Daniel L. Hansen was many things to many people, so when the tragic news of his death spread, family and friends felt everything from shock to denial.

Nearly a week after the tragedy, a memorial ceremony was held at the chapel here. Anyone faced with denial would soon come to the realization that he was really gone.

Hansen, an Explosive Ordnance Disposal technician with Marine Wing Support Squadron 171, was killed in action Feb. 14 in Afghanistan.

Hansen, a native of Tracy, Calif. was killed by an improvised explosive device blast in the Farah province.

After Hansen's death, he was promoted posthumously to the rank of staff sergeant.

On Feb. 18, the Department of Defense announced Hansen's death. Following the announcement, California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger ordered all state capital flags to be flown at half mast in honor of the fallen Marine.

"Sgt. Daniel Hansen fought tirelessly to defend the values of freedom and liberty that define our nation," said Schwarzenegger. "He was a courageous Marine who dedicated his life to serving his fellow Americans, and his sacrifice will always be remembered. Maria and I offer our thoughts and prayers to Daniel's family and friends as they mourn this terrible loss."

Hansen and his identical twin brother joined the Marine Corps the moment they graduated high school in 2002.

From the very beginning, Hansen showed a promising future, quickly picking up two promotions and receiving Yankee White clearance, a requirement for members working directly with the president.

In less than two years after he enlisted, Lance Cpl. Hansen was providing security for the president of the United States at Camp David. In early 2006, as a corporal, Hansen deployed to Camp Fallujah, Iraq.

When he returned from deployment, he was promoted to the rank of sergeant and then assigned to EOD School in Florida.

After nearly a year of training, he was assigned to Marine Wing Support Squadron 171 with the III Marine Expeditionary Force here.

While at Iwakuni, Hansen quickly developed a reputation for being reliable and motivated.

"If he saw something that needed to be done, he would step up and take care of it," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Brian

E. Brach, an EOD officer here. "For example, when we went on deployment to Australia, there wasn't a platoon sergeant. Without hesitation, Hansen stepped up to the plate and took charge of the platoon. I knew I could always rely on Hansen to get the job done."

In October of 2008, less than a year into his tour in Japan, Hansen deployed to Afghanistan.

"He was young, but he was ready," said Lt. Col. Christopher A. Feyedelem, MWSS-171 commanding officer. "I could see it in his eyes."

Hansen's identical twin brother, Matthew Hansen, recalled a phone conversation he had with Daniel during an interview with MarineTimes, "I had asked my brother after he told me of his upcoming deployment if he wanted to go. He said, 'It doesn't matter if I wanna go or not. If I don't, they will send another Marine, and I would never be able to hold my head up if something happened to him in my place.'"

On the day of Hansen's memorial, grayish clouds filled the sky. More than 450 Marines, sailors, and civilians took their seats and lined up against the walls to pay their respects to a Marine who inspired so many. A display of flowers and photos lay underneath the chapel's cross while Hansen's rifle and helmet stood at attention in front of the congregation.

At the end of the service, Sgt. Maj. Timothy A. Crisp called role. One by one, members of MWSS-171 EOD stood up, snapping to attention. After the last Marine's name in attendance was called, Crisp called one more.

"Staff Sergeant Hansen. Staff Sergeant Daniel Louis Hansen!" shouted Crisp. Hansen was gone. He was really gone and with no one to respond to his name, a deafening silence filled the chapel.

After the service ended, people lined up in front of Hansen's display to individually pay their respects.

As Marines left the chapel, they reminisced about Hansen. They vowed to exercise more, to stay motivated and to try their hardest to emulate his undying affection for the Marine Corps.

"I will always remember that smirk he had," said Staff Sgt. Aron Cheatham, an EOD technician. "He did what he loved. He loved being a Marine." Hansen will always be alive because he was a Marine. He may not be at work on Monday or running on the seawall, but he will live on in our beloved Marine Corps.

Hansen has joined the ranks of heroes who have died for our country. Every time Taps plays, he and all the others who made the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom will be remembered. He will never be forgotten.

Marines and community members prepared food with Japanese orphans ages 6 to 17 years old as the scents of spiced grilled buffalo wings permeated the air in the kitchen of a foster home.

The giggling children looked on with curiosity and anxiously gave a try at cooking for the first time with the help of Marine volunteers.

Marines and community members volunteered their time to teach the children of Yahata Gakuen foster home in Hiroshima how to work together and cook American meals Feb. 21.

While the cook-off gave the Japanese children an opportunity to practice basic math skills by measuring ingredients and use conversational English they've studied, it also gave them the chance at building friendships and making lasting memories with the Marines and community members who volunteered their time.

"All of the children have come from broken families and some were abused by their mother or father," said Motoko Murakami, the director of the Yahata Gakuen foster home. "I try to give them good experiences and memories for when they grow up."

Murakami said the children find events like the cook-off very enjoyable, and while it gave them pleasant memories for the future, it also exposed them to the ways and foods of a different culture. The Marines and community members spent the morning and part of the afternoon teaching the foster children the value of teamwork as they all cooked buffalo wings, pizza and red velvet cakes in teams.

When they finished preparing the meals and sat down to eat, the Marines and children all shared a sense of accomplishment at finishing a task together and with their own hands.

"I had fun," said Kait Nishimura, an 11-year-old at the Yahata Gakuen foster home. "We did everything together. I've realized that people can work together and have fun. I've never experienced these feelings before."

While the children had new feelings of joy and accomplishment during the cook-off, the volunteering Marines and community members gained memories and learned their own lessons.

"Volunteer work is something to live for and makes you feel good," said Lance Cpl. Samantha Blount, a ground supply clerk for Marine Aircraft Ground Squadron 12. "If I make a kid happy, it makes me happy, it makes me feel better, and lets me know I'm doing good things."

Blount said volunteering at foster homes and working with children inspires her to always do the right thing. Volunteer work provides her with memories for the future when she might need them, Blount said.

Samuels said he hopes that some of the volunteering Marines will be inspired to host their own visits to orphanages and take some of their own time to visit the children.

"When children are young they're impressionable," said Samuels.

"It's usually memories like this that they take with them and that they will use to build their foundation and form their opinions," Samuels added.

When the cook-off came to an end and everyone ate their fill, the volunteering Marines and community members loaded in their vehicles and drove away as the children lined up and waved them goodbye.

"I'm very grateful to the Marines and had fun with them," said Nishimura. "I hope the Marines will keep the new friendship with us going."

The Basic Riders Course is mandatory for all personnel, regardless of their skill level, to operate a motorcycle aboard Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni.

"But the best thing about it is that it's free," he added.

The course is free to all station personnel and taught by instructors who are accredited by the Motorcycle Safety Foundation (MSF).

Most states require individuals to take an MSF course prior to obtaining their license.

"The Department of Defense has brought this course to installations around the world in its push to encourage motorcycle safety and training," said James L. Lowell, Basic Riders Course instructor.

"For civilians, these courses can range anywhere from five to 600 dollars," said Laferty.

"I see a gamut of riders enroll in the course, ranging from experienced to inexperienced riders," Lowell added.

Since the Basic Riders Course offered here is accredited by the MSF, individuals can use their certificates when applying for a stateside motorcycle license.

The Basic Riders Course is a two-day course that combines classroom and practical riding instruction.

The Basic Riders Course is taught each week at the station safety office for classroom instruction and at a designated area on the flight line for practical instruction.

The aim of the course is to teach students how to operate a motorcycle safely, especially in traffic.

The station safety center will provide a training motorcycle for those who do not own a bike.

Students begin with straight-line riding, turning, shifting and stopping. They then progress into cornering, swerving and emergency braking.

The safety center maintains five Hyosung GT 250 motorcycles.

Individuals must call the station safety center at 253-6381 to enroll in the course.

According to Marine Corps Order 5100.19E, personnel will not be charged leave to attend the Basic Riders Course. Instead, they will need to possess a Status of Forces Agreement (SOFA) license and have permission from their chain of command to attend the course.

James F. Lowell, a Basic Riders Course instructor, explains to one of his students the course he must follow to perfect his cornering skills. During the course, the students begin with straight-line riding, turning, shifting and stopping. They then progress into cornering, swerving and emergency braking.

A student takes his final written exam on the last day of the Basic Riders Course, which is a mandatory course for all service members to operate a motorcycle aboard Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni. UTAPHAO AIRFIELD, Thailand — Three Marines and one sailor with Marine All Weather Fighter Attack Squadron 242 got the chance of a lifetime Feb. 17 — a flight in an F/A-18 Hornet.

VMFA (AW)-242 is deployed to Thailand in support of Exercise Cobra Gold which is a joint, coalition multinational exercise focused on promoting regional peace and stability.

The four service members were given the honor of flying in the F/A-18 because they all have carried out their duties in a highly professional manner and are stellar performers in the workplace.

was meritoriously promoted in December of 2008, and Lance Cpl. James Brewer was meritoriously promoted in September of 2008.

When a unit notices that a specific Marine is doing an outstanding job, the Marine's accomplishments are evaluated to decide if he merits the opportunity ride in an F/A-18. If it is determined that the Marine does rate the jet ride, a package is put together and sent to the wing headquarters for approval, according to Master Sgt. Rene Benedit, ordnance chief with VMFA(AW)-242.

Before getting into a jet, all of the preflight requirements must be met to include flight suit fittings, medical screenings and aircraft briefings, according to Benedit.

"For a maintenance Marine who works on these aircraft on a daily basis, the chance to fly in one is worth its weight in gold," said Benedit.

Osan Cougars edge Edgren Eagles, 41-37

The 2009 Far East Basketball Girls Class A Tournament came to a close here in a tough battle where Osan American High School of Osan Air Base, South Korea, beat Robert D. Edgren High School of Misawa, Japan, 41-37 at IronWorks Gym here Feb. 20.

The tournament was a double-elimination playoff that kicked off Feb. 18 and concluded Feb. 20 with the Osan Cougars taking first place over the Edgren Eagles in an aggressive championship basketball game. Jasmine Pressley and the Cougars edged Ashley Hawkins and the Eagles after four periods of well-played basketball.

"The competition was very competitive. It took a lot to win," said Celine Baldevia, Osan Cougars team captain.

The Cougars took the lead early in the first period, ending with a 10-7 lead.

During the second period, the Cougars extended their lead to 18-9 and held it throughout the entire game.

During the third period, the Eagles managed to come within four points of the lead 22-18, but ended the period down 24-18.

The Eagles did very well, without a doubt they did an excellent job, said Sarah Richardson, Edgren Eagles coach.

The Eagles played without Imani Wimbush, a key player in their starting line up.

Wimbush was injured in the first period of the game Feb. 19 against Daegu American High School of South Korea.

The Eagles rallied together without Wimbush to beat Daegu 52-40.

It was a tough game from beginning to end with the Eagles on the Cougars' heels each step of the way, but in the end, the Eagles fell five points short of the win.

"I am really proud of our team even though we lost," said Hawkins, Eagles point guard.

Although the Eagles lost, they held their heads high in a respectable fashion, going home with second place and the tournament's Most Valuable Player, Ashley Hawkins.

Jessica Bergman goes up between two Osan Cougar defenders for a rebound during the third period of the 2009 Far East Basketball Tournament Girls Class A Championship game held at the IronWorks gym Feb. 20. The tournament was a two-day double elimination event that kicked off Feb. 18 and concluded Feb. 20.
