VMA-513 draws end to 69 years of service

LANCE CPL. JAMES R. SMITH
IWAKUNI APPROACH STAFF

Since World War II, Marine Attack Squadron 513 conducted operations in the Pacific. After 69 years since their activation, the "Flying Nightmares" took their last flights out of Marine Corps

Air Station Iwakuni, Japan, May 24, 2013.

VMA-513 flew their fleet of six AV-8B Harrier II aircraft to Kadena Air Base, Okinawa, Japan, before the unit heads back to Marine Corps Air Station Yuma, Ariz., for its decommissioning July 13, 2013.

"The point here is that we are ending a true warfighting legacy," said Lt. Col. Samuel Smith, VMA-513 commanding officer. "It's sad that we are wrapping that up, but I think we're doing it in the right way."

Smith also touched on how the unit's final deployment would be in the same place the unit initially activated in 1944.

For the squadron's last deployment, they performed to their highest capability in the last six months in Japan.

"We've been able to put out more

Col. Christopher J. Mahoney, Marine Aircraft Group 12 commanding officer, hosted a motivational run here for all of MAG-12 and subordinate units, May 24, 2013.

The motivational run had all members of MAG 12 present, which totaled 2,035 Marines.

"To get 2,000 people at one place at one time and look out over all the Marines is really gratifying and motivating," said Mahoney.

According to Mahoney, the one and only reason MAG-12 exists is for presence and projection of combat power.

When Mahoney saw all the Marines of MAG-12 at the run, it was not only motivating to him, but symbolized something a little

CHAPLAIN’S CORNER

‘Prayer, meditation, temptation’

LT. CMDR. RON COX
MAG-12 CHAPLAIN

The Lord is the potter; we are the clay. God molds us into his people. So how does God mold, hammer and shape us? Often we might find that God is working in our lives through prayer, meditation and temptation. In thinking about prayer, I am reminded that our heavenly father gives good gifts. Luke 11:2 says, “What father among you would hand his son a snake when he asks for a fish?” There are many promises in the scripture concerning prayer. “Ask and you will receive, knock and the door will be opened.” These remind us how gracious and loving our heavenly father is. It is our duty to pray, and we ought to pray for all things. Perhaps especially when we are away from our families and loved ones, when we go on deployments or exercises, we pray for them and they pray for us. To these prayers, God attaches great and precious promises. When I think of meditation, I am reminded that God’s word is a light to our path and a lamp to our feet. Quite simply, we need to hear the good book. “The decree of the Lord is trust-worthy, giving wisdom to the simple. The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart,” Psalm 19:8-9. We read and reread, we hear and learn God’s holy word. You might compare it like a cow with its cud; or like an herb we rub that releases its fragrance and healing powers by being crushed. We concentrate on it, physically, mentally and emotionally, so that it reaches our heart, our core, the very center of our being. When all seems dark, it is the light we need. It may not seem or feel like it at the time, but God also works in our life through temptation or trials. (“Through much tribulation we enter the kingdom of God.”) We face spiritual warfare. We will often find the sinful world opposes us. The large number of laments in the Psalter indicate that this is quite normal but it is often through trials, troubles and temptation that God tempers our faith. Troubles can make us more godly. In this way, God trains us to rely on him and his promises. Our troubles in life are not strange, but we remember God tested Job and all his people. How is God molding you as his son or daughter? Consider how God is working in your life, through prayer, meditation and temptation.

Uniform regulations for Dummies

Trousers

It’s been a few months since the commandant ordered the wearing of service uniforms on Friday. Yet there is still an unfortunate plague sweeping the station of ‘out of regs’ trousers! In order to motivate Marines to take in their uniforms or to clarify regulations, this week, we’re covering trousers. According to Marine Corps Order P1020.34G, service trousers will be full cut, straight hanging, zipper fly front, and without cuffs. Trousers will be pressed to present a smooth vertical crease at about the center and rear of each leg. The crease will extend from the bottom of the hem to about two inches above the trouser crotch. All Marines are additionally required to maintain their uniforms in a neat and serviceable condition and “by their appearance, set an example of the strictness and neat conformity” with uniform regulations. This means Marines are overdue to get themselves squared away.

MCO P1020.34G (MALE)

... Will be long enough to break slightly over the shoe in front and to reach the juncture of the welt of the shoe in the rear. A variation of 1/4 inch above or below the welt is acceptable. Hem will be from 2 inches to 3 inches wide.

BREAK

Trouser legs will provide easy fit and be long enough to break slightly over the shoe in the front.

HEM

Hems will be two to three inches wide.

WELT

Trouser legs will extend to the "welt," where the leather meets the rubber sole. A variation of 1/4 inch above or below the welt is acceptable.

than 1,000 hours and 550 sorties, which if you look at historically, is quite an achievement for such a small unit," said Smith. "VMA-513 has set the bar very high on what a Harrier unit can accomplish out here." Most Unit Deployment Program squadrons take their aircraft back to their original station. For VMA-513, they had a different plan. "In the past, we have often left the Harriers here for a period of a year just to make it easier, so we don't have to bring them across the Pacific every time we rotate units," said Smith. "In this particular case, our sister squadron, VMA-214 'Black Sheep,' will be coming to relieve us and we will leave these jets here for them." After the aircraft are changed over to VMA-214, the "Black Sheep" will continue to use the aircraft for years to come. Leaving behind the aircraft also means leaving behind a rich history of what the Nightmares accomplished. "This squadron has a lot of history behind it," said Staff Sgt. Andrew Carrigan, VMA-513 air frame mechanic. "We were the first squadron able to drop bombs at night using radar systems." According to Maj. Andrew P. Diviney, VMA-513 executive officer, all the Marines with the squadron will either transfer to other Harrier units or to F-35 units. For some servicemembers, the bond between Marines and the squadron itself is something to hold on to. "Unfortunately, with it being the second to youngest squadron, someone has to go at some point and time," said Carrigan. "I don't want see it go. I've had a great time, a lot of good memories and a lot of friendships have been made here."

Col. Christopher J. Mahoney, Marine Aircraft Group 12 commanding officer, leads a motivational run May 24, 2013 as his last physical training session before his change-of-command ceremony May 31. The motivational run had all members of MAG 12 present, which totaled 2,035 Marines.

different. "It's important to me to see all the squadrons next to each other and to see the combat power that represents," said Mahoney. Throughout 26 years of service, Mahoney deployed to Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Australia, the Philippines, Korea and more. It's inevitable Marines deploy, but nothing had an impact on Mahoney like watching his junior Marines deploy, adapt and get their job done. "The younger Marines get taken away from their friends, family, home and language they know how to speak. Then get put in a foreign country," said Mahoney. "The way they adapt, and put their shoulder to the wheel to produce that combat power is stunning." Mahoney wants his Marines to know what kind of impact they have on world, and to always remember it. "If they remember anything from their time at MAG-12, remember they had an effect," said Mahoney. "Remember their presence and ability to push metal into the sky, and perform aviation ground support in the manner that they do it, scares people. It scares the people we want to be scared." Sgt. Cristhian Santana, MAG-12 Headquarters administrative chief, was not only motivated by the run but by seeing all of the MAG-12 squadrons come together. "It showed what the CO was actually trying to portray while he spent his time out here," said

Santana. "It showed combat power and the unit readiness that we can all get together and move at a moment's notice." Mahoney showed leadership through his actions and portrayed that to his Marines by leading from the front and interacting with them as a leader. "I'll go anywhere with him," said Santana. "He's the person you want in the front calling the shots. He's always thinking in the mind of the Marines, and considers what the outcome will be."

something that appealed to me, and that was boxing." Shrout is now an MMA instructor and a competitive Brazilian jiu-jitsu fighter and also has fought professional bouts in Muay Thai. Being a former enlisted Marine, Shrout said he knows what it's like being overseas and wants to give back to his brothers. "When I was in, it didn't matter who it was that came to visit us, it was exciting," said Shrout. "Now I'm in a position where I can provide some of that back, so anytime I get invited or asked to do a tour, I always do it." Shrout has one main goal to get across when doing MMA tours for servicemembers. "The big thing is just for people to know that, we miss you guys, love you guys, and we're excited for when you come home," said Shrout. Marines take pride in doing things bigger than themselves and Shrout understands this and said he wants to continue that as a civilian. "There are very few times in life where you get to do things bigger than yourself," said Shrout. "The military has a ton of missions that are based off of doing things bigger than one's own self." Sergeant Justin T. Perez, Marine Wing Support Squadron 171 administrative clerk, was a former boxer on the Marine Corps All-Star Boxing Team in 2004 and attended the MMA grappling session. Although Perez's fighting experience comes from boxing, he participated in the grappling session for a specific reason. "I wanted to come see where I was at physically when it came to fighting an (Ultimate Fighting Championship) fighter," said Perez. Marines are a combat ready force and Perez believes it's important for Marines to attend events like this because it can help with combat readiness. "It's a base of fighting and it establishes a group of people that can be physically fit," said Perez. "It provides situations for close quarter combat that can help you out." In the Marine Corps, teamwork and unit cohesion are essential. In MMA, the same aspects come into play when it comes down to training. "The environment around it brings people together," said Perez. Throughout the training, sweating, and hard work the MMA fighters were here to show their support to the military and left servicemembers with memories and stories to tell.

Station recognizes contributions of Asian Americans, Pacific Islanders

CPL. KENNETH K. TROTTER JR.
IWAKUNI APPROACH STAFF

Station and local residents took part in the Asian American/Pacific Islander Heritage Month celebration at the Club Iwakuni ballroom here, May 22, 2013.

The celebration demonstrated to station and local residents a part of American culture and how those of Asian or Polynesian extraction contributed to American society.

"Everyone makes an impact in American history," said Chief Warrant Officer 2 Jana Tang, Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron personnel officer and event coordinator. Tang cited the president as an example, his humble beginnings in Hawaii and ascension to the presidency.

The celebration consisted of a Taeko drum performance, renditions of the Filipino and Chamorro national anthems and various Japanese, Hawaiian and Filipino dances.

"We wanted performances vice a guest speaker," said Tang. "A lot of times when you have guest speakers, they talk about history. Yes, history is very important, but instead of talking, why not show it?"

The celebration also served as a way for those in attendance to reflect on the personal difficulties those closest to them endured.

"It allowed me to recognize what my family has accomplished," said Tang. "My mother came here to the United States and she worked hard to get where she's at. She's the one who supported me and made sure I was successful. It allows me to appreciate her and everyone who came before me."

For Tang, who is a mother, she hopes her daughter can appreciate and recognize the sense of admiration in knowing one comes from a proud, diverse people.

"I hope she has a sense of responsibility, appreciation and upholds all that she is," said Tang of her daughter. "She's not just Asian American, she's also African American, Irish and Native American. I want her to appreciate everything her heritage has brought."

For some, this was a way to be patriotic, in the sense of they are paying tribute to the U.S. through their heritage and giving back to the community, too.

"Several different cultures came together and showed their love for their countries while still being patriotic to the country they're serving," said Pfc. Kristen K. Kahalewai, a H&HS fiscal budget technician. "From a Marine standpoint, it's me giving service to my community. From a Hawaiian standpoint, it's a way of showing what makes me, me."

Whether black, white or somewhere in between, Americans are a diverse group. No matter what adjective is placed before that, America is comprised of a multitude of nationalities.

It is impossible to recognize all the contributions Americans made. Hopefully, awareness months such as this, allow people to feel a certain appreciation for all the cultures of the U.S.

Station residents gathered inside the Matthew C. Perry Elementary School cafeteria here, May 24, 2013, to celebrate two special occasions. The progression of the station's girls scouts during their bridging ceremony and to congratulate the scouts on their effort and achievement of personally making care packages for new and expecting mothers, all of which were received by Navy Capt. Sandor Niemann, Robert M. Casey Medical and Dental Health Clinic acting officer-in-charge, and Lt. Beverly Torres, Branch Health Clinic family practice department head.

"We made about 500 care packages and inside the care packages are things a new or pregnant mother would need, such as diapers ... a toothbrush with toothpaste and sanitary items," said Paige Pippin, M. C. Perry elementary school student.

Pippin mentioned her desire to find even more ways to help not only the local community, but also everyone she could.

"Just getting to help people and getting to support the community is what I really like about girl scouts," said Pippin.

Pippin also took time to thank the leader of her Girl Scout troop, who made such a donation possible.

"I want to thank my troop leader, (Naomi Ferral, Girl Scout Troop 30 troop leader), she has put in so many hours for us," said Pippin. "She has been planning meetings for us to sew and she's just a wonderful person and I really want to thank her."

The packages, retrieved by the BHC leaders, will provide families with a feeling of comfort during the trying times of child birth, a comfort the BHC is happy to supply.

"We're here today to accept some new mom-care kits that the Girl Scouts made," said Niemann. "It's fantastic that the Girl Scouts have spent so much time and energy to make the new mom care kits because it's nice when you are away from to get something that's homemade with love that has something you may need, that you might have forgotten in the stress of having a baby or getting to the hospital in time."

Neimann continued to talk about his approval and happiness on accepting such useful gifts.

"I think the scouts took away a sense of how much good they can do for their community," said Neimann. "What might seem to be small things, if they work together, can make a world of difference to a new mom and their family. I'd like to say thank them on behalf of the clinic, the new moms and the moms-to-be. This goes a long way to making things better for them. This is a touch of caring they will remember for a long time to come."

Marines toughed out one week of intense pool training to obtain their Water Survival Advanced certification at the WaterWorks outdoor pool here, May 20-24, 2013.

Obtaining their WSA qualification allows Marines to become safety swimmers and assist a Marine Corps Instructor of Water Survival with larger classes.

"For the past few days, we have been conducting WSA, Water Survival Advanced," said Cpl. Tiffany L. Baker, Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 12 Marine Corps Instructor of Water Survival. "It is a weeklong course and at the end, if you pass, you are certified and qualified to become a safety swimmer, which means for every safety swimmer a MCIWS has with the WSA qualification, they can add five more students in the pool at a time."

Some students attend the course merely to advance their swim qualification. Others have bigger plans for the future.

"I am doing this because I want to go to MCIWS school later this summer and this course is the best preparation for it," said Cpl. Andrew Purvis, MALS-12 aviation ordnanceman and WSA student. "This is great for helping in the advancement of your career as a Marine, helping other Marines become better swimmers."

Water survival is an important aspect toward Marine Corps readiness. A standard of readiness with the coined term, 'Marines are amphibious' at the very root of the purpose of the Marine Corps.

"For the entire base, there are only two Marines that are MCIWS certified," said Baker. "By getting more Marines WSA qualified we can train more Marines faster and hopefully get a few of those to the MCIWS course to help with keeping their units readiness level where it needs to be."

With the completion of the first WSA course conducted aboard Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni, hopefuls wonder when the next course will be.

"We want to host more of these classes in the future," said Baker. "We were able to coordinate with Marine Corps Community Services Aquatics Division and they helped us with using the outdoor pool the week before it opened."

The WSA course is a long stretch from MCIWS. However, it has proven in the past to be a strong basis for those wishing to attend the MCIWS course with a better grasp on the techniques of proper water survival.

MARINE CORPS AIR STATION CHERRY POINT, N.C. — Approximately 28 Marines with Marine Wing Support Squadron 274 completed the Machine Gun Assistant Instructor Course at the Basic Skills Training School aboard Camp Lejeune, May 20, 2013.

The purpose of the course is to teach non-infantry Marines proper machine gun employment and to ensure they have the necessary skills to defend their unit's position in a real-world scenario.

Now, those Marines are qualified and ready to assist their comrades on the ground.

"The training is beneficial because it teaches Marines what to do during certain operations like engaging an artillery battery," said Lance Cpl. Kaheem J. Sharpe, an automotive organizational mechanic with MWSS-274.

During the two-week course, the Marines learned proper operating procedures and basic fundamentals of the MK-19 automatic grenade launcher, the M240B medium machine gun and the M2 .50-caliber heavy machine gun.

"The Marines performed great," said Winrow. "They more than exceeded the expectations I set

Sharpe said before coming to the course, he hoped to gain better understanding of the weapons systems and have the knowledge he needs to instruct others as well. He said he now feels confident in his abilities and looks forward to

"This training benefits not only our unit," he said. "It benefits the whole aircraft wing, because we need people to operate weapons in theater. Now we can instruct and pass on our knowledge to others in different units."

RICE PLANTING FESTIVAL

A traditional rice planting festival will take place June 14, 2013, at Sumiyoshi Taisha Shrine, Osaka. The festival dates back more than 1,700 years. While rice planting occurs throughout all of Japan, the Sumiyoshi Taisha Shrine event is unique for its display of ritual observances and ceremonial, ancient procedures. The ceremony includes a tilling of the fields by oxen, dancing and singing by locals, and a procession of people clad in full Samurai armor. The main performance is the Sumiyoshi Odori, a dance by 150 girls.

THE TALE OF GENJI

The Tale of Genji Monogatari is a classic work of Japanese literature written by Murasaki Shikibu, a Japanese noblewoman, in the early years of the 11th century, around the peak of the Heian period. Sometimes called the world's first novel, the first modern novel, or the first psychological novel. The first partial translation of Genji Monogatari into English was by Suematsu Kenchō, published in 1882. Arthur Waley published a six-volume translation of all but one chapter, with the first volume published in 1921 and the last in 1933. In 1976, Edward Seidensticker published the first complete translation into English. The most recent English translation was published in 2001 by Royall Tyler and aims at fidelity in content and form to the original text. The Tale of Genji has many elements found in a modern novel: a central character and a very large number of major and minor characters, well-developed characterization of all the major players, a sequence of events covering the central character's lifetime and beyond. However, the work does not make use of a plot; instead, events happen and characters evolve simply by growing older. One complication for readers and translators of the Genji is that almost none of the characters in the original text are given explicit names. The characters are instead referred to by their function or role, such as Minister of the Left, His Excellency, or their relation to other characters, like Heir Apparent, which changes as the novel progresses. This lack of names stems from Heian-era court manners that would have made it unacceptably familiar and blunt to freely mention a person's given name. Modern readers and translators have used various nicknames to keep track of the many characters.

“If you don't win, you don't deserve it. Life is all about big moments and memories. This is about to be a big moment boys, no matter what the outcome. So let's go out and not let fear of failure hinder our success.” Mark Lange, the boys' soccer coach of Matthew C. Perry High School, walked around the room, taking objects off of bookshelves, whiteboards and walls. He showed his boys soccer balls signed by former team members, trophies that players dedicated to their coach as a token of their appreciation, and photographs which captured the countless memories of soccer that Lange as well as dozens of former players enjoyed. Lange gave a motivational speech to his boys' varsity soccer team before the 2013 Far East Pacific Division II DoDEA soccer championship game, hosted on Marine Corps Air Station Iwakuni, Japan. The Samurai would appear in the championship match for the 4th consecutive year and attempt to win the title for the third time in four years.

In order to achieve their goal, the Samurai had to compete against seven other teams, including the Daegu High School Warriors, the Edgren High School Eagles, the E. J. King High School Cobras, the Okinawa Christian International School Crusaders, the Osan American High School Cougars, the Yongsan International School Guardians and the Zama American High School Trojans. Soccer matches began May 20, with pool play to determine seeding. The Samurai earned the top seed in group B, winning all three matches. In double-elimination bracket play, the Samurai beat the Cobras 4-0, the Trojans 4-0, and the Cougars 2-0 to earn a spot in the championship match. Osan American High School managed to win their way back into the championship match. On May 23, the championship match began at 3:30 p.m. at the Perry high school field. The first and second goals were scored by Perry junior Gaku Lange. The Cougars pulled one back before half-time and the first half ended with a score of 2-1 in favor of Perry. In the second half, the Samurai took control of the match and their strong defense made sure the ball stayed on the opposite side of the field. The Samurai scored their third goal through Perry sophomore Jon Cadavos, whose long throw-in bounced off a Cougar defender and into the goal, making the final score 3-1.

The final whistle sounded and the remaining team members as well as Coach Lange surged onto the field. The Samurai boys wept tears of joy as they rejoiced on the field. The boys then gave their thanks to Osan American High School, the referees, and finally the supportive crowd. Everyone then retreated to the high school gym, where awards were presented, including the Far East Championship banner. The Perry boys won awards, including All Far East, which went to Gaku Lange, senior Yasuki Milsop, sophomore Justin Hill, and junior Calvin Barker. The best offensive player award went to Gaku Lange, and best defensive player went to Yasuki Milsop. The Golden Boot award, given for the most goals scored during the tournament, was awarded to Gaku Lange, who scored 14 goals. Gaku shared why he thought the team was so strong this year. “It's definitely the Samurai mentality that continues this brotherhood going,” said Gaku. “This year's team was miles ahead of previous years' teams in terms of communication, both on and off the pitch. On the field we helped each other out, directing and communicating, and off the field after matches we did well to assess our weaknesses and strengths and that helped us grow as a team.” It's without a doubt Coach Lange has led his teams (past and present) to success both on and off the field. “I enjoy helping student-athletes growing both as athletes and as people,” said Mark.

Mark Lange, Matthew C. Perry High School boys' soccer coach, embraces Jon Cadavos, Junior and offensive player, after he scored his first, and what may be the most important goal of the season, during the 2013 Far East Pacific Division II DoDEA soccer championship game, hosted on MCAS Iwakuni, Japan. The final whistle was blown for the championship game between Osan American High School and Matthew C. Perry High School. Perry wins with the final score of 3-1.

The Iwakuni Time Machine

In the June 1, 1990, issue of the Torii Teller, Marines reported on the benefits of the Joint Reception Center, the arrival of 1-800 numbers aboard the station, the retirement of A-4M Skyhawks, the arrival of Marine Tactical Electronic Warfare Squadron 2 as part of the Unit Deployment Program and a page featuring Ozako Tadahiro, the film developer for Training and Audiovisual Support Center.

His darkroom work produces bright results

Flipping through the pages of the Torii Teller, a picture of a plane captain guiding a Harrier in grabs the readers attention. It's sharpness comes from the concentration of the photographer, but its production is from the hardwork of one man.

Ozako Tadahiro, or Snap as he is called, is the film developer for Training & Audiovisual Support Center (TAVSC). He takes care of all black & white, color, and slide film.

"Snap does 99.9% of the work in the Torii Teller as far as photo developing is concerned. He also shoots the pictures in the studio," remarked Sgt. Malcolm Jones, a TAVSC photographer.

"Snap is really good in the technical aspects and is capable of doing any job in the photolab. He's very good at what he does," emphasized Jones.

Snap's small frame and modest manner belies his abilities. He responds to questions politely without boasting or bragging about his knack for film developing.

For the past two years, Snap has been working at TAVSC, coming off ten years as a member of the Japanese Maritime Self Defense Force (JMSDF) where he received his training in photo developing.

Not only does Snap develop, he also takes pictures. "He'll just say he processes, but he sometimes goes out and shoots too. However, he doesn't work on classified material. The Marines do that," replied Cpl. Mark Maynard, motion picture photographer.

It may seem odd to process film all day, but for Snap dealing with pictures is an enjoyment that is also carried on into his personal life.

"As long as I have free time, I'll shoot pictures especially Japanese events and festivals. I also like to take pictures of children," remarked Snap.

Since he was a young child, Snap has wanted to do photography. This was the main reason for joining JMSDF since he wanted to be a photographer.

Now the next step for Snap is to study the various aspects of shooting with a video camera.

For now, he's taking each job as it comes. "He's always willing to do what needs to be done. Snap's very professional and diligent," replied Jones.

This professional attitude brings about a friendly working environment. "I learn a lot because there is a difference between Japanese and American photography as far as equipment is concerned," Snap remarked.

As he continues to learn new aspects of photography, Snap works on and keeps the days from becoming too long, developing what went on that day.
